Guidelines for workers giving lifts to young people and vulnerable adult

The general rule is that workers should not give lifts to young people or vulnerable adults. This is to protect both the young person and vulnerable adult and the worker. However, sometimes the worker and young person or vulnerable adult need to travel somewhere as part of a work-based process and occasionally if the worker can drive, it may be more practical for them to travel by car. If this is the case it may be possible for a worker to give a young person or vulnerable adult a lift so long as all the following conditions are met:

- The worker in charge has authorised it
- The young person has returned a signed parental consent form (except in emergencies when a phone call can be used as consent, this should be recorded in writing)
- The worker in charge has spoken directly to the parent/carer of the young person or vulnerable adult
- The worker can provide evidence that they have appropriate insurance and M.O.T., back seat and front seat, seat belts
- The worker in charge is aware of when and where the worker and young person are travelling to and from, and when and where they are returning to and how long it will take
- The worker in charge must contact both the young person and worker to ensure that they have returned safely and within the time frame
- If organised in advanced, arrange for another worker to be with you

Public transport should always be used

Internet Use

E-Mail

- Workers are not permitted to receive or send personal e-mails on the Project address.
